Part III, General	| Explanation:| Nature Health Global designs sustainable solutions for planetary health to better prepare the world to be more resilient to emerging disease threats climate change land use change biodiversity loss unsustainable trade in wildlife and their products and other global anthropogenic environmental changes affecting planetary health. This purpose shall be achieved through scientific analysis of the extent pattern and potential future scenarios of emerging disease threats and anthropogenic environmental changes; by working collaboratively in the USA and around the world to design solutions to build sustainability and resilience in communities ecosystems and nations; by supporting the open and transparent sharing of scientific information to the public policy makers and civic society; by countering misinformation about these issues and supporting scientists and organizations under pressure for providing information on these issues; and by working transparently and equitably to co-design and implement solutions that promote a sustainable future for people wildlife and our planet.
Part III, Line 28	| Explanation:| Fighting for the health of our oceans: Our marine environments are under threat from a series of environmental changes including pollution biodiversity loss over-fishing and the rise of emerging diseases. Our work involves collating and analyzing data on these threats understanding their causes and developing databases maps and economic assessments to determine how best to fight them. Additionally we have provided evidence to the public and through scientific publications to raise awareness of these issues.
Part III, Line 29	| Explanation:| Red flags in green spaces - understanding land use and Lyme disease risk: We have partnered with land trusts and community members to advance tick research enhance tickbite prevention education and inform natural area management strategies that prioritize tick control. In 2025 we worked with the Mianus River Gorge and Mohonk preserves to provide multiple training sessions intensive fieldwork and workshops that produced and analyzed data on tick abundance in different sites. We then analyzed these data to produce maps models and presentations to inform the public about the risk and help design solutions to these public health and environmental change problems.
Part III, Line 30	| Explanation:| Managing the peer-reviewed EcoHealth journal: EcoHealth is an international peer-reviewed journal addressing health and sustainability challenges within diverse settings from public health practice and human and veterinary medicine to conservation and ecosystem management to rural and urban development and planning. The journal advances research practice and knowledge integration at the interface of ecology and health by publishing four issues per year with over 50 peer-reviewed papers containing high quality research and review articles that address and profile new ideas developments and programs. During 2025 we successfully managed the journal improving the speed of review and publication increasing the quality of articles and expanding the journals impact scientifically and to the public.
